Anti-Castro Youth Front Organized

A new Cuban exile action group, sparked by Bay of Pigs veterans, has been created here to coordinate anti-Castro youth movements on the island and in exile.

Using the slogan of "Cuba, dead or alive", the Revolutionary Youth Front has banded together Brigade 2506 members, Cubans who received special army training at Fort Jackson and students in exile.

"Actually, the front is being reborn," said Jorge Roblejo Lorie, coordinator in exile. "It was created in Cuba in March 1961 but became dispersed after the invasion."

The rebirth of the group, which plans to provide clandestine workers on the island with needed medicine, arms and supplies, came after a secret meeting held in Santa Clara Province in October, said Roblejo.

Roblejo worked with the underground inside Cuba until early 1961 when he joined Invasion Brigade 2506 after 10 days training in Guatemala.

The underground session reportedly was attended by representatives of anti-Castro students, workers, farmers, Rebel Army and government scholarship holders who drafted a program for future "planned chaos."

Heading the secret meeting was the Cuban coordinator, known only by his clandestine name of Javier, according to Roblejo.

The aim of the new group is to make things tough for the Castro regime through increasing and systematic confusion and breakdowns in youth centers — in order to touch off a hoped-for rebellion.

"The exile section of our group keeps in close communication with anti-Castro youth inside Cuba and we will guide ourselves by their actions," said

Roblejo who was ransomed with invasion prisoners two years ago.

"In the past, exile groups have tried to act without considering what actually was going on inside Cuba," said the 29-year-old Havana University graduate.
